PARTRIDGE'S FATAL BLOW.

CORONER HANLY HEARS THE STORY OF WATCHMAN RAFFERTY'S DEATH.

The Lumber Merchant Repeats His Statement of Striking in Self-Defense. Dr. Donlin, Who Made the Autopsy, Says Rafferty's Skull Was Unusually Thin—The Coroner Puzzled.

Charles R. Partridge, the lumber merchant who is charged with killing Frank Rafferty, a laborer, at his lumber-yard on Wednesday last by striking him on the head with a measuring rule, came before Justice Patterson at Jefferson Market Police Court this morning, accompanied by his counsel.

In view of the death of Rafferty, the case was sent down to Coroner Hanly.

Mr. Partridge had left town to go to Elmira, N. Y., immediately after he had given bail in $10,000 last Wednesday morning. His wife was sick there, and he intended to return to New York as soon as possible.

When he reached Elmira and learned that Rafferty had died at the hospital he came back immediately, arriving in town last night and, going at once to the Twentieth street police station, gave himself up.

At the Coroner's office this morning he was accompanied by Lawyer House, his counsel, and several friends, who were ready to go on his bond should new bail be required.

Mr. Partridge is a tall, well-built man, of about forty years of age. He wears a heavy dark mustache and imperial, and his complexion is tanned a deep bronze. He seemed to be very anxious and nervous this morning and was evidently worrying about the case.

In his statement, he claims that Rafferty made an attack on him first and threatened to kill him, and he only struck him with the measuring rod, which he held in his hand, in self-defense. He did not imagine that the blow was hard enough to do any serious injury.

Dr. Donlin, the Coroner's physician, who made an autopsy on Rafferty's body yesterday with Dr. Ferguson, says the man's skull was the thinnest he ever saw.

At the temple, where the blow was struck which caused the fracture, the bone was only one-thirty-second of an inch in thickness, where in an ordinary person it is at least one-eighth inch thick.

"It was just like an eggshell," said the doctor, "and it is a wonder that a man of his reckless habits should not have had his skull smashed in long before."

It is said that Rafferty was an ex-convict, having served a term in State prison for an atrocious assault upon a woman, and was known as a desperate character.

Coroner Hanly did not know exactly what to do in the case, and took Lawyer House over to the District Attorney's office for legal advice upon the subject.

They held a protracted session.

Coroner Hanly at length decided to accept bail in $10,000, and John L. Hamilton, a carpenter and contractor of 346 West Twenty-seventh street, furnished the required sum and Partridge was accordingly released.

SENT TO RANDALL'S ISLAND.

Final Disposition of Matron Webb's Abandoned Wife.

The wife who has been in the custody of Matron Webb for forty hours was sent to the Jefferson Market Police Court this morning to be turned over to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction.

The little fellow who answers to any name that is mentioned, and whom, it is believed, has been cruelly abandoned by his parents or guardians, will go to the Randall's Island Reformatory, where his identity probably will be lost.

In the time he will form one of a company of boys to be shipped West.

ADIEU, OLD JACK WILDEY.

DEATH REMOVES A NOTABLE CHARACTER, WELL KNOWN AT CITY HALL.

Old Jack Wildey is dead. He was a familiar figure about the City Hall.

The tall, lank form of the old man, attired in a semi-uniform, which included the coat of the old Volunteer Fire Department, was wont to shamble about through the corridors, and his old-time friends who gathered there would not regret the vacant seat, and sorrowfully tap their foreheads, as if to say: "Poor old Jack! He's off in his upper story."

But Jack Wildey was not always thus. At one time he was among the notables of Manhattan Island.

He joined the old Volunteer Fire Department in 1840, and was for many years Foreman of Engine Company No. 11.

He went to the front during the civil war, as Captain of Company I, Eleventh New York Volunteers, and was credited with saving the colors of the Sixty-ninth Regiment at the first battle of Bull Run.

The prominence given him by this event led to securing the temporary Hall of Records for the then extremely lucrative office of Coroner, to which he was elected.

He was the chief of the office and the profits of a concert hall, which he afterwards ran on Broadway, made him independently rich, but like many other great fortunes, his wealth disappeared like dew before the sun.

Wildey was a great friend of Boss Tweed, and with him and others organized the original Mutual Baseball Club which, with the Atlantic, of Brooklyn, was among the first professional clubs.

He died Wednesday last at Bellevue Hospital at the age of sixty-six years, and was buried last afternoon from his wife's undertaking establishment in Spring street.

A SLEEPER'S FALL.

Young John Brennan Rolled Down the Fire-Escape Well to His Death.

John Brennan, a young man of twenty-three years, who drove a brewery wagon and lived at 226 West Eighteenth street, was picked up battered and dying in the court in the rear of his home this morning.

He lay down on the rear fire-escape last evening to take a nap in the cool night air. About 10 o'clock his sister called him, but he said that he would not come in and that if he fell asleep his brother, who was coming home, would wake him up before midnight.

An hour or more later he rose on his knees and was about to crawl through the window. When one of the shutters blew against him, he turned around, put out his hand and pushed it back. In doing so he lost his balance and fell over the edge of the fire-escape platform down the fire-escape well three stories to the stone flagging in the rear court.

He struck on the right side of his head, smashing the back part of his skull on one side. He died before a physician could arrive.

HER SKULL CRUSHED IN.

MRS. LOGAN FOUND DEAD AFTER PARTING WITH HER HUSBAND.

There is something suspicious about the manner in which Margaret Logan came to her death. According to the police report, she fell down the stone steps to the cellar of the rear house, 28 South Fifth avenue.

Mrs. Logan was married, and her husband was only released yesterday from a ten days' sentence. The couple formerly occupied rooms in the house, but poverty compelled them to move away five months ago, and since then Mrs. Logan had lived wherever she could secure a situation, while her husband slept in cheap lodging-houses.

Margaret lost her situation a week ago and applied to Mrs. White, one of her former neighbors, to give her shelter for a few nights. She worked all day yesterday until after supper, and she was surprised at seeing her husband walk in. He asked her for money to get his supper, and the couple went out together.

Mrs. Logan returned at midnight. A few minutes later a bumping sound was heard, and then there were moans. The White family ran out and discovered the woman at the foot of the steps. Her head was wedged in between the lower step and the cellar door. She died in a few minutes, without having spoken.

Her skull was crushed in, and there was an ugly cut above the eyes. The body was removed to the Morgue.

While the remains were at the station-house this morning the husband came in.
